

Broken

I hold his poems in the palm of my hand.
He uses words of pain and love in equal measure,
trauma between the lines, love in the curve of the words.

Like looking in a Wonderland mirror, I see myself,
capable of creation and destruction,
bleeding and cutting,
broken yet capable of reflecting and holding light.

He is me and I am him.